SOUTHEAST | SMALL TOWN WEEKEND

Hotel Saba opens at the end of the year with more than 50 rooms, a pool, and a couples spa.

The Lodging

The first surprise I encounter at Rosemary Beach is the accommodations. Lodging options include town homes, lofts, and large beachfront houses with porches for spending hours with a good book. The much-anticipated Hotel Saba will offer another choice when it opens later this year.

My husband and I settle on a loftlike flat in the Town Center. No seashell lamps and wicker furniture here; instead we find sleek, modern furnishings and a kitchen decked out with stainless appliances and granite countertops. And even though I've always considered an ocean view a necessity, we love the quaint notion of dashing downstairs for coffee before an early morning stroll on the beach.

The Community

After beachcombing, we decide to take in the views away from the shore. Meandering down paths and boardwalks and happening upon hidden gems, such as the four community pools, the racquet club, and Butterfly Park (where you can help yourself to fresh herbs to use for dinner), is a treat in itself. Soon catching on to the way to move around, we rent bikes at Bamboo Beach & Bicycle Company. Channeling our inner children, we bike around the town and along the sidewalks of Highway 30-A, which connects Rosemary Beach with other seaside communities.

As we cycle, we take in the architecture. West Indies, St. Augustine, Charleston, and New Orleans-style houses sit alongside each other seamlessly. And peacefully: No grass—only native plants—is allowed at the residences, so there's no noise or air pollution from lawn mowers. This is especially nice considering the houses' close proximity to one another, a design aspect that enhances the community feel.

More than 160 permanent residents, many seasonal guests, and regular renters flock here for that vibe, and with a new airport in the works for nearby Panama City, it will soon be easier for visitors from all over to access Rosemary Beach.

The Food

Wild Olives, where we have lunch, offers salads and sandwiches you can enjoy outdoors, as well as a market to keep the kitchen stocked during your stay. Other casual spots include Summer Kitchen Café and Cowgirl Kitchen.

Wander through the town around dusk, and you'll find lots of activity—families making their way up the boardwalk from the beach, groups playing bocce on the Western Green, and drinks and music at Courtyard Wine & Cheese. Owner Bryan Krutz says he usually sees a late-afternoon crowd in swimsuits, and then another group looking for an appetizer of wine and cheese before dinner. "We also get a late-night crowd wanting one last nightcap," he adds. Some patrons visit his European-style establishment before heading to dinner at nearby Onano for Northern Italian entrées that incorporate fresh seafood.

With other communities such as Seagrove Beach, Seaside, WaterColor, and Grayton Beach so close, however, a dinner excursion is in order for us. We hop in the car our first evening for a five-minute drive to Café Thirty-A in Seagrove Beach and are not disappointed with our crab cakes, filet mignon, and standout chocolate flourless cake with raspberry coulis and vanilla bean ice cream.

The Shopping

Back at Rosemary Beach, I find that the seaside shopping at the Town Center—another unexpected plus—is worth the time away from the ocean. After waffles at Cowgirl Kitchen our second morning, I take my time wandering through the town tempting myself with stylish finds while my husband plays golf in Panama City.

I feel the fun vibe as soon as I walk in the door at Gigi's. With a toy train circling the store, art supplies, colorful toys, and great dress-up clothes for kids, the store is a must for little ones. Tracery, the sister company of G: Branding & Design and Birmingham-based architecture firm Dungan Nequette, offers design services as well as accessories by Roost, Lee, and Barbara Cosgrove, to name a few. It's a great stop for local homeowners and visitors alike. "We take clean, modern elements and mix them with soft textures and French and English antiques," says owner and buyer Paige Schnell. Another home furnishings store, Shabby Slips, offers custom slipcovers.

Even though casual is usually the way to dress at the shore, you may
